

A large, moss-covered tree trunk lies horizontally across a river, creating a natural barrier. The water flows through the gaps in the trunk, appearing as white rapids. The surrounding forest is dense and green, with sunlight filtering through the trees. The tree trunk is thick and gnarled, with a rough, textured bark. The water is dark and turbulent, contrasting with the bright green moss on the wood.

De repente, um obstáculo natural barra a passagem pelo Rio Grande. Hora de parar, dar um mergulho e admirar a bela árvore caída